

Written by DMaddox, MD
January 16, 2005

Enough

I traveled enough to know that yearnings are fulfilled at home, not on the road.

I was educated enough to know that wisdom comes not from scholarship, but from surrender.

I knew enough wealth to learn that a loyal loving heart is better than anything that is for sale.

I pursued enough possessions to learn they do not matter.

I experienced enough sensual pleasure to know it provides no comfort for my spirit.

I held enough power to know that satisfaction comes from serving, not control.

I was given enough talent and success to know that all of it was a gift from God.

I was rescued from enough embarrassment to see the absurdity of my pride.

I was given enough insight to know my failures were predictable.

I saw enough beauty to know that nothing can match the smile of a child

I endured enough pain and suffering to know that I need a Saviour

I was given awareness of His presence, which now and forever, is more than enough.

